

The British Empire and the French Republic will defend their native soil. They will fight on the beaches, on the landing grounds, in the fields and in the streets, and they will fight in the hills. If the British Empire was subjugated and starving, then the new world with all its power might would come to the rescue and liberate the old.